

Plaridel

A Philippine Journal of Communication, Media, and Society
2015 • Volume 12 • Number 2

Locating Southeast Asian Horror Cinema

Issue Editors: Katarzyna Ancuta
Patrick F. Campos

- i A Note from the Editors
Katarzyna Ancuta
Patrick F. Campos

Articles

- 1 Asian Ghost Film vs. Western Horror Movie: Feng Shui
Tilman Baumgärtel
- 14 A Ghostly Feminine Melancholy: Representing Decay and Experiencing Loss in Thai Horror Films
Alessandra Campoli
- 36 Haunted Thailand: The Village as a Location of Thai Horror
Chanokporn Chutikamoltham
- 55 Thai Horror Film in Malaysia: Urbanization, Cultural Proximity and a Southeast Asian Model
Mary J. Ainslie
- 83 Contemporary Malaysian Horror: Relational Politics of Animism and James Lee's Hysteria
Bogna M. Konior

110 The Return of the Repressed: Pemuda and the Historical Trauma in Rizal Mantovani's Jelankung
Anton Sutandio

131 Critical Pleasures: Reflections on the Indonesian Horror Genre and its Anti-Fans
Meghan Downes

149 Lost and Found: The Found Footage Phenomenon and Southeast Asian Supernatural Horror Film
Katarzyna Ancuta

178 Alien Abjection Amid the Morning Calm: A Singular Reading of Horror Films from Beyond Southeast Asia
Ju-Yong Ha and Joel David

Interviews

201 The Dreamlike Languor of the Supernatural: An Interview with Dodo Dayao
Bogna M. Konior

211 The Invention of Lao Horror Film: An Interview with Mattie Do
Patrick F. Campos

The cover: The cover is a still from Yam Laranas's The Road (2011). The scene captures the folksy and earthy dimension of Southeast Asian horror films, punctuated by the presence of modernity in the form of the automobile. Image captured and used with permission.