

Filmography of Filipino Films 2011

Introduction by Lucenio Martin L. Lauzon

Compiled by Lucenio Martin L. Lauzon,
Robert James de Roque, and Alex Nicolas P. Tamayo

Introduction

In the annals of Philippine cinema, 2011 would be remembered as a blockbuster year, with both mainstream and indie hits breaking box office records. The mainstream successes, No Other Woman and Praybeyt Benjamin, were joint ventures from the country's two biggest studios: Star Cinema and Viva Films. The indie sensations included Cinemalaya Best Picture, Ang Babae sa Septic Tank, and the genre smash, Zombadings: Patayin sa Shokot si Remington, which triumphed at the tills in the scale and level of revenues never thought of or imagined for a Philippine independent production.

But this is not to say that the lot for indie films in general has improved. Hardly any of the indie films produced mainly for such festivals as Cinemalaya, Cinema One, Cinemania Digital Lokal and Metro Manila New Wave managed to have theatrical runs. The very few that ever got a regular release proved not to have the luck of Septic Tank and Zombadings and failed miserably as expected.

But beyond the box-office arena, other films released this year embodied industry achievement with a string of international honors. Niño won the grand prize in Pusan, South Korea. Bahay Bata scored initial major awards in Vancouver, Canada; Deauville, France and Gran Canaria, Spain. Ang Sayaw ng Dalawang Kaliwang Paa made waves in Bogota, Colombia with a major prize. Bisperas copped the main prize of a parallel competition in Tokyo, Japan. After its world premiere in the Cannes Directors' Fortnight, Busong went on to bag the foremost critics' prize in Kazakhstan.

All things considered, the industry activity for the year that generated the most buzz and excitement far and wide, however, was the principal production for a Hollywood franchise. The Philippines bested other Asian cities to be handpicked as the location for the climactic sequence of Universal Pictures' The Bourne Legacy.
