

UP Film Institute Filmography of Filipino Films 2007

Introduced by Lucenio Martin L. Lauzon
Compiled by Lucenio Martin L. Lauzon,
Lynette S. Quintillan, and Berinice I. Zamora

In 2007, mainstream films trailed not only their foreign counterparts in terms of number but also the homegrown digital releases. For the first time since the emergence in 2004 of the digital motion picture exhibited commercially in regular theaters, digital releases outnumbered the country's mainstream output. In fact, the Philippine mainstream output's figure for the year would not have reached 39 (a stark drop from 49 in 2006) if not for some crossovers — digital productions that were blown up to the industry-standard 35mm print and outright indie forays on celluloid that had nothing in common with the usual mainstream offerings.

In contrast, digital titles with the full benefit of regular run in 2007 increased to 40 compared to 12 in 2006 — a steady increase from five in 2005 and only one in 2004. As expected, much of these digital releases pertained to productions brought about by the previous year's Cinemalaya, Cinema One and Cinemanila festivals. Such was the rapid rise in digital production that the so-called digitals or digimovies now constitute a genre of its own in the context of Philippine cinema at large.

Nevertheless, even the combined efforts of the local mainstream movies on one hand and the digital films on the other — resulting in a combined output of 79 — was still no match to the total output of 180 international releases that made it to domestic cinemas in 2007.

Leading studios in the business were the same as in previous years — Star Cinema of ABS-CBN, Regal, Viva and GMA. In a display of cooperation, each of the studios managed to enter into co-production ventures with another: Regal with GMA; Viva with Star Cinema; and GMA with Viva.

Of the Philippine mainstream outputs, straight dramas significantly outpaced all other genres with 10; while comedy had 9; horror, 7; romance, 6; sex drama, 4; and action, 3.

Star Cinema produced the most number of movies with eight titles, among which was One More Chance — the highest grosser in 2007. Star Cinema was also behind two more notable box-office hits of the year, namely, A Love Story and Sakal, Sakali, Saklolo, further firming up its position as the undisputed top film production company in the land.

Philippine cinema continued to gain notice abroad with at least one important title — Brillante Mendoza's Foster Child from Seiko Films — leading the way. This dramatic film about an urban-poor family which makes a living by providing a temporary home to abandoned babies pending their formal adoption was selected for the Directors' Fortnight at Cannes and the New Directors/New Films Festival of the Film Society of Lincoln Center in New York.

In this filmography, each entry contains: 1) the title of the film; 2) genre, running time (in hours and minutes), MTRCB classification; 3) short synopsis; and 4) production data. Abbreviations for the latter are: P = Production Company, D = Director, ST = Story, OST = Original Story, SP = Screenplay, A = Actors, PD = Production Design, C = Cinematography, E = Editor, M = Music, S = Sound, TS = Theme Song, and OTS = Original Theme Song.
